this outstanding compendium of articles on europe's military situation as we enter the new millennium has been compiled under the aegis of the George Marshall European Center for Security Studies. The leading analysts of military studies in every major nation of Europe are included along with three overview pieces that set the tone and content for this nicely integrated volume. The opening pieces by Martin Shaw on the evolution of a common risk society, Christopher Dandeker on the military in democratic societies, and Wilfried von Bredow on the re-nationalization of military strategy set the tone for the work as a whole. Although the Cold War is now a decade removed from the new Europe, the challenges of transition to new defense systems and institutional structures still confront those who plan the future for the military establishments of Europe. The individual country studies contained in this volume, as well as the final analysis of the trends and probable future developments in Europe, should be required reading throughout the national security structure for politicians and decision makers seeking to understand the dilemmas facing European militaries and the societies they defend. The country chapters cover a wide range of nations: Jean Callaghan examines the Bulgarian armed forces after its 1997 elections; Marie Vlachova and Stefan Sarvas review civil-military relations in the Czech nation; Jano Sabo studies the role of the defense sector in Hungary; Adriana Stanescu sees Romania as a case of delayed modernization; Paul Klein and Jürgen Kuhlmann review the German armed forces in the context of a peace dividend; Bernard Boene and Didier Danet consider France in the light of the post-draft situation; Marina Nuciari and Giuseppe Caforio consider the Italian military in a democratic context. Finally, Jan van der Meulen and his colleagues look upon the Netherlands military as a case study in post-modernization. The final contribution is a summary report by the editors on the lessons that have been learned in assessing the contemporary civil-military complex. In all, this is a state-of-the-art volume on the state of the armed forces in Europe.

In recent years, the peasant household has become a central focal point of social history. This is true not only because the peasant represents the major element of European society through the nineteenth century, but also because many of the main issues in modern historical debate can be studied within the sphere of the peasant family. This book deals with the European peasant family during the period of transformation from agrarian to industrial society, the time called by some the period of proto-industrialization. The essays in this volume explore some of the major issues concerning the influence of the economy, society, and institutions on the peasant household, and conversely, the influence of the peasant household on the outside world. Themes dealt with include the ways in which the physical environment and the economy may make for very different family structures and even affect intra-family relationships; the effects of inheritance, marriage, and kinship strategies, as well as social pressure on peasant family structure and demography; the debate about changing gender roles and status; the debate over the manner and effects of class formation; questions of social and political agency; the nature of gender and parent-child relations; the validity of proto-industrial theory and the role of peasants in initiating industrialization as consumers, producers, and as a labor force. In examining these themes, the essays provide both case studies and innovative analysis by preeminent international scholars in the fields of family and women's history, economic history, and demography.
